

Malcolm Winston

Malcolm is a life-long outdoorsman, amateur chef and music lover. He currently works as an internal auditor at Los Alamos National Laboratory, where he is responsible for ensuring compliance with federal, state and laboratory regulations and procedures. Malcolm also has considerable experience working for public accounting firms and a not-for-profit hospital providing services to local business, tribes and governmental agencies.

From an early age, Malcolm had interest in cooking, live music and was active in the Boy Scouts, obtaining the rank of Eagle Scout and Vigil Honor with the Order of the Arrow. Malcolm attributes his volunteerism and leadership skills to his time in the Boy Scouts. While in Boy Scouts, Malcolm gained leadership skills through a variety of roles such as camp counselor, Chapter and Lodge Chief and Chief of Activities and Training on a Section Level. While attending New Mexico State University, Malcolm was involved in student government and Delta Sigma Pi (DSP), a professional business fraternity. While a member of DSP, Malcolm recruited new members, promoted the fraternity throughout the university and brought in professional speakers.

When he's not working, Malcolm likes to attend live events, try new restaurants and bars and explore the various hiking trails in northern New Mexico.
